Foundation

AMAN-IMAN

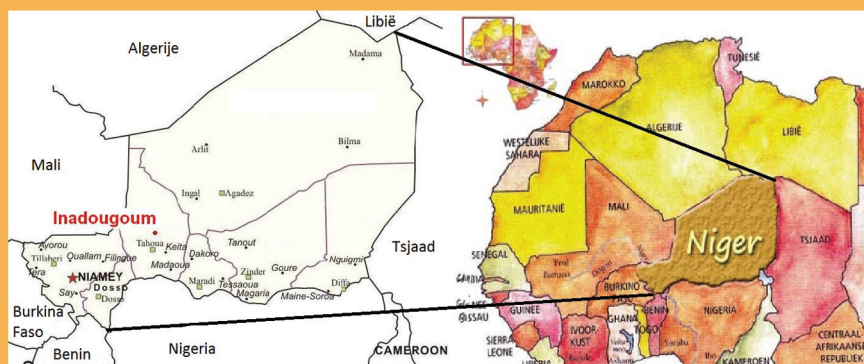

(Water = Life)

The Aman-Iman Foundation aims to improve the quality of life in Inadougoum and the surrounding villages in Niger.

Niger

Niger is an African country south of the Sahara. It is completely shut off from the sea and it borders seven different countries. Niger is a republic and it was once part of the French African Colony. The composition of this colony drastically changed after the 1958 revision of the French constitution and in 1960, Niger – among other countries – was given permission to form its own constitution. The Sahara is situated in the north of Niger, where volcanic activity has formed a mountain range. The valley of the Niger river is situated in the south west and the land south of the river is now savannah covered in grass and trees.

Inadougoum

North of the city Tahoua, in the middle of the desert lies the village of Inadougoum. The area surrounding the village covers more than 900 km² and approximately ten thousand people - Tuareg, Haussa, Fulani and Woudabe - live in thirteen different communities and together these communities have fifty-thousand head of cattle. The thirteen villages in the region are cut off from any form of social service, such as sanitation, health care and education and are not familiar with the concepts of emancipation and sustainable agriculture.

Aim of the foundation

The Aman-Iman Foundation helps to improve the quality of life in Inadougoum and the surrounding villages in Niger. By facilitating access to social services such as clean drinking water, education, sanitation, sustainable development, agriculture, vegetable plots and – by all these things – achieving a great deal of self-reliance, the life expectancy and life standards of the people in Niger will improve tremendously, in particular those of the women and children living in the Tchintabaraden region.
